

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In an information processing system, processing in a network is significantly reduced compared with conventional methods. Information is transmitted from an information processing apparatus to an information receiving apparatus via a transmission channel established between the information receiving apparatus and the information processing apparatus. The information receiving apparatus is able to easily acquire the information input to the information processing apparatus, and thus it can further reduce processing in a network compared with conventional methods.

303108_1.DOC